

MUNBOLDT 2027 — Background Guide

Committee: General Assembly (GA)

Topic: Strengthening Multilateral Cooperation to Address Cross-Border Crises in the 21st Century

I. Letter from the Dais

Dear Delegates,

It is with great pleasure that we welcome you to General Assembly (GA) at MUNBOLDT 2027. Over the course of this conference, you will be asked to step into the shoes of representatives entrusted with shaping real solutions to one of today's most pressing global challenges: Strengthening Multilateral Cooperation to Address Cross-Border Crises in the 21st Century.

This background guide is meant to give you a starting point for your research — it is not a substitute for your own investigation. We encourage you to read widely, consult primary sources whenever possible, and arrive at committee ready to defend your delegation's position with evidence and conviction.

Debate in GA can move quickly, and the issues you will discuss do not have easy answers. We expect creativity, respectful disagreement, and a genuine willingness to listen to perspectives different from your own. Diplomacy is not about winning an argument; it is about finding workable solutions that a diverse group of stakeholders can stand behind.

We look forward to seeing the resolutions, communiqués, and ideas you bring to the table. Should any questions arise before or during the conference, please do not hesitate to reach out to the dais.

Sincerely,

The GA Dais — MUNBOLDT 2027

II. Introduction to the Committee

The General Assembly is the main deliberative organ of the United Nations, bringing together every Member State on an equal footing to discuss the full range of issues covered by the UN Charter. While its resolutions are not legally binding, they carry significant political weight and often set the tone for the international agenda on peace, development, and human rights.

As you prepare for GA, take time to understand not only what this body can formally decide, but also how it operates in practice: how proposals move from an idea to a vote, what level of consensus is realistically required, and what happens after a decision is adopted. Understanding these mechanics will make your strategy — and your speeches — far more convincing.

III. Background and History of the Topic

While this guide cannot cover every historical development relevant to Strengthening Multilateral Cooperation to Address Cross-Border Crises in the 21st Century, delegates should keep in mind that this issue did not emerge overnight. It is the product of decades of political, economic, and social developments whose consequences continue to shape the positions that Member States and delegations hold today.

Your research should trace how the issue has evolved over time: which events first brought it to international attention, which agreements or frameworks have already attempted to address it, and why — despite those efforts — it remains unresolved. Understanding this history matters, because many of the proposals you will hear in committee are simply updated versions of ideas that have been tried before, with varying degrees of success.

IV. Current Situation and Key Issues

Although every delegation will bring its own perspective to the table, most discussions on Strengthening Multilateral Cooperation to Address Cross-Border Crises in the 21st Century tend to revolve around a shared set of underlying tensions. As you prepare, consider how your delegation would respond to each of the following:

- The erosion of public trust in multilateral institutions amid rising nationalism and geopolitical rivalry
- Coordinating timely responses to overlapping humanitarian, climate, and economic emergencies
- Ensuring equitable representation of small and developing states in global decision-making processes
- Financing collective action without overburdening Member States with competing domestic priorities

These issues are not exhaustive. You are encouraged to identify additional angles that are particularly relevant to the country, organisation, or actor your delegation represents.

V. Past International Action

The international community has not been silent on Strengthening Multilateral Cooperation to Address Cross-Border Crises in the 21st Century. Earlier resolutions, conferences, and frameworks have laid important groundwork, even if implementation has often fallen short of what was promised. Research which instruments are most relevant to GA — including any prior actions taken by this committee or the bodies it answers to — and consider honestly why those efforts succeeded, stalled, or failed outright. A strong proposal builds on this record rather than ignoring it.

VI. Bloc Positions

Delegations facing this topic generally fall into broader groupings shaped by geography, level of development, historical experience, and strategic interest. Rather than memorising a fixed list of blocs, ask yourself: what does my country gain or risk under each possible outcome? Who are my natural allies, and where might I find unexpected common ground with delegations I would not normally agree with? The strongest speeches and position papers reflect this kind of authentic, country-specific reasoning — not generic talking points.

VII. Questions a Resolution Must Answer (QARMAs)

1. How can GA balance the urgency of addressing strengthening Multilateral Cooperation to Address Cross-Border Crises in the 21st Century with the sovereignty and real capacities of individual Member States?
2. What mechanisms should be created — or strengthened — to monitor compliance with any agreement reached on this issue?
3. How should the international community distribute the financial and technical resources needed to implement the proposed solutions?
4. What safeguards should be included so that the resolution does not place a disproportionate burden on the states or communities least responsible for the problem?

VIII. Suggestions for Further Research

- Review your country's official statements, voting record, and relevant domestic policy on Strengthening Multilateral Cooperation to Address Cross-Border Crises in the 21st Century.
- Read recent reports from relevant international organisations, research institutes, and reputable news outlets.
- Identify two or three countries whose positions are likely to be closest to — and furthest from — your own, and think through why.
- Draft a one-page position paper outlining your delegation's stance, priorities, and possible areas of compromise before the conference begins.

Closing Remarks from the Dais

We hope this guide sparks your curiosity rather than satisfies it. The real work begins now — with your own questions, your own reading, and your own ideas about how the world could work better. We cannot wait to see what you bring to GA.

See you in committee,

The Dais
